

Digital Library Collection Development

Umesha Naik and D. Shivalingaiah

Department of Library and Information Science, Mangalore University Mangalagangothri, INDIA

umeshai@yahoo.com

This paper begins with an understanding of digitization, the meaning, the selection of materials, the collection development, the preservation, the access digital information and some issues involved in the digitization. The collection service is an independent mechanism for introducing structure into a distributed information space. At the preliminary stage it addresses the issues of organizational motivation, possible content, target audience, long term support and funding. For planning, about staff and resources, creation and maintenance delivery methods, charging policy and long term support and funding. During the process of creation aspects to be considered are, available technology, in-house or out-source, project management, design, testing, unveiling and long-term support and funding. Preserve the integrity of and ensure the persistence. Each of the functions enumerated in the working definition of B“digital libraryB” select, structure, offer intellectual access, interpret, distribute, preserve integrity, and ensure persistence is subject to the special constraints and requirements of operating in a rapidly evolving electronic and network environment.

Key Words: Digital Library, Digital Collections, Policies, Digital Materials